NATURAL HERITAGE AREAS PRIORITY LIST

MARCH 1995

Introduction

The North Carolina Natural Heritage Program compiles the N.C. Department of Environment, Health, and Natural Resources' priority list of "Natural Heritage Areas" as required by the Nature Preserves Act (NCGS Chapter 113A-164 of Article 9A). The list is based on the program's inventory of the natural diversity in the state. Natural areas (sites) are evaluated on the basis of the occurrences of rare plant and animal species, rare or high quality natural communities, and geologic features. The global and statewide rarity of these elements and the quality of their occurrence at a site relative to other occurrences determine a site's priority rating. The sites included on this list are the best representatives of the natural diversity of the state and therefore have priority for protection. Inclusion on this list does not imply that any protection or public access exists. This list of sites and their priorities is based on the best available information as derived from the Natural Heritage Program databases. More complete information on those natural areas may be obtained from the Natural Heritage Program.

Organization of the List

Natural Areas

The following list of North Carolina's most significant natural areas (sites) is organized by county, and the sites within each county are ordered by ratings of national, statewide, or regional (greater than local) significance. This list does not include sites considered to be of local importance.

Site Significance

- A - Nationally significant sites contain examples of natural communities, rare plant or animal populations, or geologic features that are among the highest quality or best at their kind in the nation, or clusters of such elements that are among the best in the nation.
- B - Statewide significance sites contain similar ecological resources that are among the highest quality occurrences in North Carolina. There may be better quality representations or larger populations elsewhere in the nation, including possibly a few within the state.
- C - Regionally significant sites contain natural elements that may be represented elsewhere in the state by better quality examples, but which are among the outstanding examples in their geographic region of the state.

Organization of Sites

Frequently, related sites occur in clusters. The occurrence of a site in association with other sites increases its long-term viability and ecological significance. Such clusters are designated as macrosites or megasites depending upon their size [macrosites are of 5 to 100 square miles (3,200 to 64,000 acres); megasites are greater than 100 square miles (64,000 acres)]. Standard sites are nested within these. These macrosites or megasites may contain lands which normally would not be included in a natural area but which are important for consolidating the cluster. Also, one or more macrosites may fall within a megasite.

In other cases, sites do not occur in clusters with other sites. These sites are referred to as "stand alone" sites.

Sites which occur within larger sites are grouped in this list under the name and priority rank of the larger site. The nesting of a site is indicated in this list by symbols. These symbols are:

- > A "stand-alone" site (i.e., a site or macrosite that is not nested within another site).
- => A macrosite nested within a megasite.
- ==> A standard site nested within a larger site (i.e., nested only in a macrosite or megasite).
- ===> A standard site nested within a macrosite that is nested within a megasite.

Sizes of priority areas differ greatly. A site may be restricted to an isolated half-acre containing a remnant population of an endangered species or other unique feature. Another area may encompass thousands of acres and support many exceptional natural resources and special-interest species, but which should most logically be considered a large composite natural area. Thus, the same priority category may include an area as small as a single rock outcrop harboring an endangered species, or as large as the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

Quad

The name(s) of the U.S.G.S. 7.5" quadrangle (quad) which shows the location of the site is given. Where the site falls on more than one quad, all quads are listed.

Owner Type

The third column in the list indicates the type of landowner, whether private or government.
